Office of Egyptian Vice-President Omar Suleiman An Update on the Egyptian Dialogue February 7, 2011

Below is a statement issued yesterday by Egyptian Vice-President Omar Suleiman on the ongoing reform dialogue in Egypt.

CAIRO, EGYPT – Yesterday, Egyptian Vice-President Omar Suleiman held a series of meetings with representatives of the full spectrum of political parties and forces, as well as a number of youths from the January 25th movement. The meeting participants arrived at the following consensus:

All participants of the dialogue arrived at a consensus to express their appreciation and respect for the January 25th movement and on the need to deal seriously, expeditiously and honestly with the current crisis that the nation is facing, the legitimate demands of the youth of January 25th and society's political forces, with full consideration and a commitment to constitutional legitimacy in confronting the challenges and dangers faced by Egypt as result of this crisis, including:

- The lack of security for the populace;
- Disturbances to daily life;
- The paralysis of by public services;
- The suspension of education at universities and schools;
- The logistical delays in the delivery of essential goods to the population;
- The damages to and losses of the Egyptian economy;
- The attempts at foreign intervention into purely Egyptian affairs and breaches of security by foreign elements working to undermine stability in implementation of their plots, while recognizing that the January 25th movement is a honorable and patriotic movement.

The participants in the national dialogue agreed on a number of political arrangements, and constitutional and legislative measures, which the participants agreed by consensus would be of a temporary nature until the election of new president at the end of the current presidential term, including:

First: Implementing the Commitments Announced by the President in Speech to the Nation on February 1, 2011:

1. No nomination for a new presidential term will take place;
2. A peaceful transition of authority within the constitutional framework;
3. The introduction of constitutional amendments to articles 76 & 77, and related constitutional amendments needed for the peaceful transition of authority;
4. Legislative amendments related to the amendments of the constitution;
5. Implementation of the rulings of the Court of Cassation, regarding challenges to the People's Assembly election
6. Pursuit of corruption, and an investigation into those behind the breakdown of security in line with the law
